POLICE HERE RECOVER HALF OF CASH AND CHECKS, MOST OF RATION STAMPS STOLEN FROM KEYSTONE DAIRY COMPANY

Seven-State Broadcast Made for Apprehension of Arthur Paolino—His Home on Pear Street, Where Goods Were Found, Is Thoroughly Searched—Evidence of Having Made Hasty Departure

Police have sent out a seven-State broadcast for the apprehension of Arthur Paolino. Paolino is suspected of committing a number of robberies here during the past few months, and when police forced their way into his home at 921 Pear street this morning they recovered $570.55 in checks and cash of the $1,044.71 in checks and cash which was reported stolen from the Keystone Dairy Company yesterday morning.

Police in their investigation of the Keystone robbery became suspicious of Paolino, and endeavored to apprehend him, but Paolino was successful in getting away. Going to the residence of the suspect this morning the police broke open the front door, and made a thorough search of the house. Paolino, his wife and child had gone, apparently making a hurried departure.

In their search of the premises the police found hidden beneath the mattress of a bed on the first floor a tin box which answered the description of the one stolen from the Keystone Dairy. The box was immediately taken to the dairy, identified, and the contents checked. It is also believed that the greater portion of the 1500 ration stamps stolen from the Keystone Dairy have been recovered, although they had not been checked up until noon today. These stamps were in a number of small envelopes, and all of these envelopes have been recovered except one.

Chief Linford J. Jones, Anthony Russo, chief of Bucks county detectives; Daniel Ferry and Anthony Nicols, aided by Pvt. Newton and Pvt. Forestin, Pa. State Police, went over every inch of the interior of the Paolino residence from cellar to roof. Beds were taken apart, closets searched, and what wearing apparel remained was carefully examined. All members of the Bristol police force were summoned to join in the search of the town for the missing suspect. Officers were posted at Penna. Railroad station, every hotel in Bristol was checked, and a number of the factories were also visited.

The activity of the police on Pear street created great excitement in the vicinity, and crowds of spectators continued on page three

Music Lovers Anticipate Concert by Florence Kirk

Florence Kirk, the brilliant young dramatic soprano who appears in song recital this evening at 8.30 o'clock, after opera successes in New York and South America and a series of appearances under Toscanini, never knew she had a voice until she tried out for the glee club of William Penn high school, Philadelphia.

Trained at college to teach music in the public schools, she turned almost overnight into a prima donna of reputation. Her manager, Arthur Judson, who has launched many young Americans on their concert careers, from Nelson Eddy whom he discovered as a church singer in Philadelphia to Rise Stevens whom he first heard as a Juilliard student, predicts a great future for her.

The concert will be given in Bristol high school auditorium under auspices of Bristol Cooperative Concert Association.

Work To Start Tonight On Sixth Ward Plaque

William J. Dougherty, general chairman, called the Sixth Ward Plaque committee meeting to order last night with a large gathering in attendance, and the minutes of the previous meeting were approved as read.

Secretary and Treasurer C. S. Welch, Jr., reported that the collections to date now totalled $982.50—only $17.50 short of the $1,000 goal set—and stated that with some money still to be turned in he was confident the $1,000 mark would be surpassed.

William J. Mack, chairman of the plaque selection and purchasing committee, reported that he had received 160 names to adorn the plaque, and that work would be started on its erection at 6.30 this evening, and would appreciate the efforts of volunteers in erecting it.

Music, public address and speakers committees all reported progress; and Mrs. S. J. Younger reported in the same manner on behalf of the women aides.

Mr. Dougherty called upon all committee members to get out and do their bit during the next three weeks, and expressed his appreciation for all they had done thus far.

Mrs. Harry Crohe states that she thought Mr. and Mrs. Paul Tomlinson, whose seven sons are in the service, should be invited to the unveiling ceremonies as guests of honor, and she was assured that the matter had already been taken care of.

H. Wesley Spencer stated that his program committee would meet at his home this evening to formulate plans for the unveiling, and that the affair would be tied in with "I Am An American" Day.

Introduced to the gathering by Sydney E. Scott, Barry Place, Staff Sgt. George Robert Brown, of Garfield St., winner of the Distinguished Flying Cross and other medals, was called upon for a few remarks. He stated he appreciated what the folks back home were doing for those in service, but also said that he did not want an extension of leave, as much as he would like to attend the unveiling, because he was anxious to get back in the air and help to win the war as quickly as possible. In answer to a question by Mr. Shire, Staff Sgt. Brown said he was sure a program of the affair mailed to each sixth warder in service would be greatly appreciated. At the conclusion of his address, Staff Sgt. Brown was given a rousing ovation.

STRANGE PACIFIC CONVOY ASSUMES VENEER OF PLEASURE TRIP DESPITE JAP MENACE

(This is the first of two articles describing life on a convoy in the Pacific.—INS.)

By Jack Mahon

(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
PEARL HARBOR, Apr. 29.—(INS)—This is the story of one of the strangest convoys ever to sail the blacked-out Pacific. It is the tale of a ship with a cargo of mercy, fighting men, food and some All-American contempt for the Japs.

Picture a convoy ship on which Army officers and a small group of nurses played shuffle-board and lolled in deck chairs by day; then danced, sang, played cards and staged amateur theatricals to pass away the blacked-out evening hours.

Sounds fantastic, doesn't it? You'd have to see it to believe it but it was on just such a ship that we sailed, recently, from the West Coast into this theater of the war.

Not that the convoy was carelessly handled or violated security regulations. Far from it. Every soldier, and even the half dozen war correspondents, including the writer, stood sea and security watches around the clock and all blackout and other regulations were strictly observed.

But, because of the mixed group, some 20 other women, including civilians and four young members of a newly-organized women's air raid detachment, the voyage assumed the veneer of a pleasure trip to this peacetime, tropical playground.

Ours, an all-officer ship, was part of a small convoy, as those things are rated. The boys came from all sec-

HOLD TWO MEN IN THEFT OF WHISKEY

Leo Kasperzak and William Kelly, Both of Phila., Held For Further Hearing

ARE ADMITTED TO BAIL

The two men brought here from Philadelphia Tuesday by the police and charged with having conspired to steal 15 cases of whiskey from the Wilson Distilling Company's plant here, were given a preliminary hearing yesterday. Both men were held for a further hearing so as to afford police an opportunity to complete their investigation. The hearing was before Justice of Peace, Arthur P. Brady.

The two Philadelphia men: Leo Kasperzak, 23; North Mascher street, near Dauphin, driver of a truck, and William Kelly, 33, North Fourth street, were arrested by Philadelphia police late Monday night.

The Bristol police yesterday introduced signed statements reportedly signed by the two defendants, in which both men admitted the conspiracy.

Kasperzak in his statement reviewed how he had driven a truck to the Wilson plant here on Monday afternoon to get a load of whiskey to haul to various destinations. While loading the whiskey he asked Kelly, a shipping clerk, for a sample. Kelly is said to have told him that he could not give him a sample but then allegedly discussed with him the loading of 15 extra cases onto the truck. It was agreed that Kasperzak was to have five of the cases for his own use and was to leave the other ten at a destination for Kelly.

There was some discussion as to where the ten cases were to be left for Kelly, but finally it was decided that they should be left at the home of Kasperzak's mother.

After Kasperzak reached Philadelphia he had a change of heart and informed his employer of the affair. Police were notified and a detective went to the home of Kasperzak's mother where the whiskey was left and Kelly was placed under arrest when he called for it.

Through the co-operation of the Philadelphia police word of the arrest was telephoned to Bristol and Chief Jones, Anthony Russo and Charles P. Alta went for the prisoners.

Brought to Bristol shortly before noon Tuesday the two men were questioned and it was then that they gave the statements offered in evidence.

Both men were later released in $700 bail each.

LATEST NEWS BULLETINS

Wilhelmshaven Naval Base Heavily Bombed

London—The German naval base of Wilhelmshaven was heavily bombed last night by the RAF, an Air Ministry communique said today.

Extensive mining operations were carried out simultaneously in Axis-controlled waters, particularly in the Baltic Sea.

The scope of the Wilhelmshaven raid and mine laying sorties was indicated by the fact that 23 planes were lost. On the basis of previous RAF losses it would appear that almost 500 planes were in the air over Germany and nearby waters.

It was understood that mine laying was on a greater scale than any previous operation of its type by the RAF and the operation was important in relation to the war against U-boats and also as an aid to Soviet Russia.

The Baltic is used by the Germans as a training ground for submarine crews and the mines are bound to hamper Nazi training programs. These waters currently are the scene of great Nazi activity in preparation for the next phase of German operations in Russia.

British 8th Army Moves In for The "Kill" in Tunisia

Allied Headquarters in North Africa: The powerful British Eighth Army at the southern end of the Tunisia battle line began moving in for the kill today as Allied armies to the north crushed the Axis back still further in the narrowing bridgehead before Tunis and Bizerte.

Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's headquarters reported that Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery's desert warriors were engaged in "very, very active patrolling" on the front north of Enfidaville as the British First Army and French troops stepped up their threat to Tunis.

The United States Second Army Corps carrying the weight of the Allied attack at the northern end of the line continued to advance on Mateur, gateway to the Bizerte naval base.

The fiercest of the fighting still was borne by Lieut. Gen. Kenneth A. N. Anderson's First Army on the front northeast of Medjez-el-Bab where the British are striking against the last mountain barrier separating them from the plains before Tunis.

New advances were reported from the Medjez-el-Bab sector but the British suffered a setback in one of two strong counter-attacks by Nazi armor.

CLERGYMAN GIVES THE HISTORY OF ROTARY

Rev. J. R. Gailey is Speaker at Meeting of Bensalem Club

ITS VALUE IS STRESSED

ANDALUSIA, Apr. 29 — The Rev. James R. Gailey, secretary of Bristol Rotary Club, was the guest speaker at the meeting of Bensalem Rotary Club on Tuesday evening. His subject was "Rotary International—Its History and Objectives." The Rev. Mr. Gailey was introduced by S. Penn Salmon, president of the local organization.

The guest recalled for Bensalem Rotarians the fact that Rotary received its start in 1905 when Paul Harris, of Chicago, Ill., feeling the need of discussing problems with other men, called a group of friends together for luncheon, then going to the Harris office an exchange of ideas took place. Affording a period for discussion and good fellowship, these weekly gatherings proved an occupational inspiration, and finally developed into the Chicago Rotary Club. In 1919 at the first convention, 16 clubs were represented, and Harris, the founder was elected president of the group which was called "The Association of Rotary Clubs." Just prior to the global war Rotary had 5,000 clubs and a quarter million members throughout the world.

The value of the local clubs and the place which classification talks have in the local programs was considered by the Rev. Mr. Gailey. "Your experience helps me and my experience helps you" is the general opinion of Rotarians. The speaker stressed the fact that what a member gets out of affiliation with Rotary is in proportion to what he puts into it.

PRICE PANELS WILL START OPERATING IN COUNTY NEXT WEEK

Members Are To Assist Retailers in Carrying Out The Regulations

INDUCTION ON MONDAY

First Task Is To Be That of Dealing With Pork Prices

"Price Panels," under command of the Office of Price Administration, will start operating in Bucks County next week. The first task of the panels now in the process of being set up is that of dealing with pork prices.

At present the chairman of the five boards in Bucks County are securing names of nominees for service on these price panels. The panels will consist of groups of individuals "formed to listen to complaints made in various areas against price ceilings," according to Charles H. Boehm, county co-ordinator. "The panel members will try to assist stores and retailers in carrying out regulations, but will not have any power to enforce price ceilings—merely to help arrive at satisfactory agreements as far as merchants are concerned in maintaining regulations," is announced. Should there be flagrant violations, such will be taken up by the Philadelphia office of the OPA.

On Monday evening next the panel members will be formally inducted, and instructions will be given them. This ceremony will take place at the Bucks County Education Building, Doylestown, at eight o'clock. Carlisle Hobbsack will administer the oaths, and instruction will be by Charles Miel, who has charge of setting up the price panels in the Philadelphia district.

The number on each panel may vary according to the demands of the locality, it is said, but there will be a minimum of three members. The number of panels in each district will also vary. Bristol will start with one panel, it is stated, and may soon have two. If the need is seen the number of members on the panels here may be enlarged. The number of panels and their size will be governed, states Mr. Boehm, by the number of retail outlets in the entire area. "The price panels will operate to assist in distribution of information to dealers. They will be principally volunteer groups, and the panels will assist the merchants, also be an aid in preventing cases being taken to Philadelphia headquarters." Thus many prosecutions will be avoided, it is hoped.

In Bristol the chairman of the first panel named J. Leslie Kilcoyne, Esq., who was nominated by Andrew Jackson, and who has been approved for the post by officials. Mr. Kilcoyne will be chairman of the local panel.

There are five War Price and Rationing Boards in Bucks County, and each will have at least one price panel.

The president of the Bucks County Bar Association, Webster Grim, had been asked to make suggestions as to names of lawyers who could serve on the boards, and some of those nominated were able to accept.

HOPE OF EASY WAR VANISHES
Any disposition there may have been to discount official warnings that American casualties in the war on the Axis will be heavy has been dissipated in recent days. There is now no doubt that the nation's losses in men in the fighting ahead will be formidable, that they may be the largest suffered in any war in which the nation has engaged.

Daily the casualty lists grow as Americans die in Tunisia, in the Southwest Pacific on the oceans. And the hostilities in which the nation's armed forces are engaged may prove to be only the preliminaries to the fighting that is ahead. It would be surprising if it were otherwise.

To bring Germany and Japan to unconditional surrender will be a hard and bloody job, but an undertaking for which there is no alternative. Only complete defeat of the Axis can insure this nation against national disaster.

The country has had an awakening to the full potentialities of the Japanese menace in the Pacific by disclosure of details of the bombing of Tokyo by American fliers a year ago. The American people have been brought to a belated realization of the type of foe they are pledged to conquer. The ruthlessness of the Japanese will result in some of the most ferocious fighting in history when United States forces move against Nippon in force.

A solemn note of warning of casualties to be expected has been sounded by Roane Waring, national commander of the American Legion, who has returned from a tour of the North African battle area. American forces in Tunis have suffered terrific casualties, he reported. And the Tunisian campaign, he added, is just a preliminary skirmish to the big battle of Europe.

Waring's observations bear out conclusions of newspaper reporters to the effect that American troops have had the best training in the world, but that only actual battle experience can season them for the work that must be undertaken.

GOTHAM'S FLIGHT
Governor Thomas E. Dewey of New York recently appointed a commission to investigate and report on the economic status of New York City, generally held to be slipping. The commission has reported, and it does not mince words.

New York City is losing trade at an alarming rate. The burden of taxation, including the city's sales tax, is having a disastrous effect and high assessments militate against industrial expansion. The high state stock transfer tax is driving financial business to other cities. Wages in certain industries in Gotham are higher than elsewhere, a deterrent to the acquisition of new industries.

New York City's output of women's wear is declining, this business going to other centers in increasing volume. Because of normal emphasis in the metropolis on the manufacture of consumer's goods, little war business has gone to the town presided over by "Butch" LaGuardia. The big city's predominantly small industries are handicapped by wartime restrictions. The commission's report sums it up:

"Unless effective measures are taken promptly looking toward the aggressive development of business and employment opportunities, New York City may expect to continue to lose ground relative to the rest of the nation in the future as it has in the past."

Death Goes Native by MAX LONG

CHAPTER THIRTY-ONE

Dr. Latham, in an unemotional voice, gave his testimony about my shouted threats at Delmar.

The inquest proceeded with, to me, a nightmarish speed and precision. After I told of finding Mrs. Delmar stabbed to death, my knife was introduced as evidence and examined by a visibly impressed jury. Dr. Latham's description of my wild exodus from the house carrying the broken lamp aroused them further.

When I got a chance in the witness chair again, I burst into an explanation of the stealing of the lethal weapons by the murderer, done to implicate me. I couldn't let those simple jurors get too deep an impression of my possible guilt before Komako pulled his rabbit out of the hat. I went on to tell how the murderer had taken away my engine key, thus keeping me a virtual prisoner in Waimaka. I was all set to recount the story of the faked confession and poisoned whiskey, but Sam Ota cut me short:

"We're not trying the case here, Mr. Hoyt. All the coroner's jury needs to decide is that there have been two murders and—"

"But don't we go to say," a small and very rotund jurymen spoke up, "that it looks like Mr. Hoyt done the murders?"

"Listen to the evidence," Ota shouted at him. "If then you all decide it would be good to lock up someone to be tried later in court, you can do that."

"Sure! All right, lock up Mr. Hoyt. His spear, his knife—"

"Silence!" Ota commanded. "You will be asked for your verdict after you have all talked it over. Komako, do you want to say anything?"

Komako emphatically did. He addressed the jury in Hawaiian, and warmed up to what I took to be a great oration before Ota grew weary and told him to save the rest for the judge. Ota sent the jury outside, then, to talk it over.

I watched them as they filed out and gathered in a cluster near the hibiscus hedge. I was alarmed because Komako had seemed unable to present the evidence I hoped he might have. Otherwise he would not have allowed the case to go to the jury yet.

The silence which had fallen over the lanai was smashed with the bang of a door somewhere in the house. Then came an outburst of quarreling voices. Everyone on the lanai started out of his seat and looked toward the living room, but the matting curtains concealed whatever was going on. It sounded as if furniture was being overturned. Grunts and screams warned us of a desperate struggle. Komako, the play clutched in his hand, lunged toward the living room, knocking over the table as he went. He reached for the curtain, tripped, and the matting came down over his head.

Above the heaving obstruction of Komako in the doorway we saw the Rawsons—the Rawsons, mind you!—snarling at each other, he shaking her in an iron grip, her face distorted with anger. The veneer of civilization had cracked and fallen off, revealing the most primitive of savages. She was screaming:

"You can't do this! I hate you—you can't do this!"

And at the same time he was shouting her down with almost unintelligible bellowing: "Control yourself! I'll not stand it—here, where you doing—"

Sam Ota was yelling at them, striving to climb over Komako who was getting to his feet in the doorway. Gwen had twisted away from Rawson. Her arm flashed up and there was a knife gleaming in her hand. The crowd surged forward, adding hoarse shouts to the confusion, shouts of warning. There was congestion in the doorway and my vision was obscured for a moment. I fought to get through the press of bodies. Elaine gave way before me, her face whiter than ever, her eyes enormously dilated.

Then I saw the Rawsons again. He had her grasped in one arm while struggling to get the knife from her hand which was raised high in the air. Suddenly he let go and tugged a revolver from his pocket. Instantly his knife plunged down toward his shoulders. She leaped backward, and Rawson fell to the floor with a thud that jarred the house. At the same moment his revolver went off with a deafening roar.

High over everything rose the sound of Elaine's scream. She toppled, grasping at the air, and fell. I caught her and eased her to the floor, but the next instant Dr. Latham thrust me aside and gathered her unconscious form into his arms.

"They've done it now!" he said bitterly.

Pandemonium followed the shot. Screaming people made a break to get away. Others rushed towards the Rawsons. Everybody was milling and shouting. I held my ground and was silent, for something had suddenly clicked in my brain: The strange similarity of the quarrel and murder I had just witnessed to that of the maid's story of Polly Morgan and Frederick Hawks.

I jumped on a chair and looked over the heads of the people toward the living room. Rawson was on his feet, very much alive, in the hands of Ota and protesting loudly. I did not need to hear Mrs. Rawson, struggling in Thornton's grasp, say: "But it was only acting, you know!" My hunch had been right—they had put on the scene, with Komako's connivance, to force a reaction from Elaine and the Lathams. I waited for nothing more, but dropped down from the chair and hurried to the couch where Elaine was lying, the doctor bending over her.

My business was there. The effect on Elaine of what had just transpired was perhaps going to tell us everything. Her scream and consequent fainting at the sound of the shots depended on what she would say on regaining consciousness. Dr. Latham glanced up at me and ordered flatly:

"Get my medicine bag—it's on my living room table."

I stepped off the lanai and relayed the order to Henry, who was staring in bewilderment at the hubbub still going on over the Rawsons, then returned to my post beside Elaine.

Behind me Komako's great voice was raised over the tumult of Ota's threatening to take the Rawsons into custody and their excited objections. "Be quiet!" Komako roared. "Do this for me! Sam, listen!" and he resorted to a mixture of Hawaiian and Japanese lingo.

Budd was alternately demanding an explanation and squelching Herb for doing likewise. Over all was the excited comment coming from outside among the Hawaiian spectators, sounding like a bunch of mynah birds on the roof at dawn.

But while I heard all this I watched Elaine's unconscious face, waiting for some sign. The doctor counted her pulse, his mouth and eyes grim. Mrs. Latham pushed me away to kneel beside the girl. She looked pityingly at her son, but said no word. The doctor's eyes never left Elaine's face. His mother produced an old-fashioned green bottle of smelling salts from the pocket of her cotton housedress, and uncorked it under Elaine's nose.

Henry came running with the medicine bag and Dr. Latham asked him for a glass of water. I became aware that the lanai was being cleared of people. Voices still argued, but at some distance. Then Komako came to stand beside the rattan couch, looking down at the girl anxiously.

The doctor released Elaine's limp hand to stir a powder from his kit into the water Henry brought. Mrs. Latham massaged the girl's wrists and stopped now and then to wave the smelling salts in front of her face. Komako sighed in my ear and I knew he was suffering with suspense as I was.

Finally there was a flutter of the bruised lid. The doctor slipped his arm under Elaine's head and lifted her gently, holding the glass to her lips. At last she swallowed and he laid her back. Then the deep blue eyes opened and stared. They were blank. Only for a moment, however. Horror crept into them, she shuddered and tried to struggle up.

"Peter!" she cried weakly, and when the doctor held her down with gentle firmness, she seemed not to recognize him, but said urgently: "You must see to Peter! Oh, go quickly!"

I think we all realized that she was back in her hidden, mysterious past. The shock of seeing the murderer reenacted had jolted her memory free of whatever obstruction had clouded it.

"In a minute," the doctor said, and his face was as white as hers. "You must lie still."

She began to cry hopelessly. "He's dead—I know he's dead—there's blood all over him—" and she almost went under again. The doctor held the glass to her lips, and his hand was shaking.

Komako bent close over her from his great height. "Tell old papa," he said persuasively, "who is Peter?"

Her eyes fastened on his kindly brown face with no flicker of recognition. She answered automatically: "My husband."

Dr. Latham drew back, and if ever I saw bleak misery and loneliness descend on a man, I saw it then. He set the glass down on the floor and turned away to hide a face that was quivering. I realized then just what we were doing to both of them, and the cruelty of bringing her back to face only horror. I felt that I would rather pay the penalty myself than let it go any further. But now it had to go on.

Komako went on in the same even tone: "And so you kill your husband?"

The blue eyes widened. "Not... Yes, maybe it was my fault." She brooded a while and then said faintly, "We'd been quarreling. He was drinking... I should never have let him drive, even if he struck me. I was a coward..."

The doctor turned back swiftly, watching her, waiting.

Komako said clearly, "You are Polly Morgan."

She rested quietly with closed eyes. Then she said reasonably: "No, you have it wrong. I'm Molly Logan—Peter Logan's wife." With the name, she started up again.

"Oh, is he dead? Have you looked? The car went over the bank—"

Komako said firmly: "You was in your room at the hotel—"

"No. We'd left the hotel, but Peter wanted to go to another—and another—like we always did. I wanted to go home—to Mayfield—that's what we were quarreling about..."

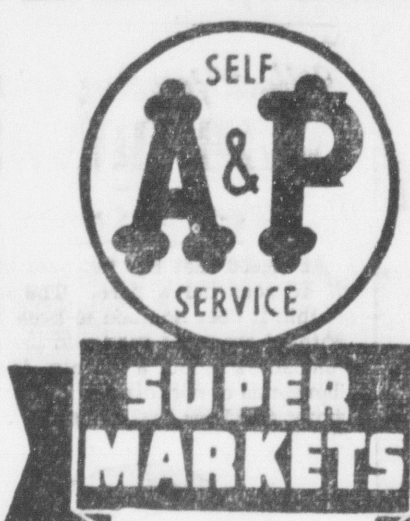

She raised her head and looked out into the hot sunshine where tropical blossoms rioted, the thatched roof of the next cottage was visible, and where brown men and women thronged the path. She sank back.

"But this isn't Mayfield! Where am I? Where have you taken Peter?"

gregated on the street. Hundreds of questions were asked by these spectators, but the police answered none as they forced their way through the door and began their search of the premises.

George Boos, member of the Keystone Dairy Company, was checking the contents of the box recovered and said he could not give accurately the number of stamps which had been found. Mr. Boos was loud in his praise of the quick work of the police in recovering his property, and said: "I cannot say enough about the good work of Chief Jones and Chief Bucks County Detective Russo in this case. When they walked into my office this morning with the box, I immediately knew it was mine, and didn't know what to say."

The Keystone Dairy was robbed sometime Tuesday night at 8.30 and seven o'clock yesterday morning. When members of the firm opened the office they found that the cabinet had been forced and the money taken. Entrance was gained through an iron door on the sidewalk on the Pond street side of the building, and then through a trap door in the floor of the office.

Clergyman Gives The History of Rotary

The work done by Rotary for a group of boys in Chicago by that club a number of years ago was mentioned. 17 boys of the "borderline" gang type being helped to positions of usefulness in civic life, after many entanglements with the law. The group became known as "The Boys Brotherhood of America, of Chicago." In speaking of aid given by Rotary to crippled children, the Rev. Mr. Galley told of corrective surgical work and hospitalization paid for by one Rotary Club for a young man who appeared hopelessly crippled. The Rev. Galley was present at the session when the same young man leaped onto a table, sound of limb and body, and expressed thanks for assistance given.

HULMEVILLE

Mrs. H. Uwellan Miller, of Langhorne, presided at the meeting of Neshaminy Methodist Ladies Aid Society, which was held on Tuesday evening at the home of Mrs. Samuel K. Faust. Twenty members were in attendance. Reports were received on Easter plants sent to shut-ins. The Aid plans to have some repairs made at the parsonage, also some new furnishings provided. The devotional period was in charge of Mrs. Faust, and she and the co-hostess, Miss Grace H. Hlick, served refreshments. Mrs.

Hugh B. Webster directed the social period.

"The Affairs of Martha," a motion picture, will be presented at South Langhorne Casino, on Monday evening, as a benefit for Hulmeville-Middletown Parent-Teacher Association. The picture stars Marsha Hunt and Richard Carlson. There will be but one showing, that starting at eight o'clock. Russell Haines, Middletown Township, is head of the ways and means committee, arranging for the performance. Miss Sarah I. Gill, Philadelphia, was a recent visitor of relatives in Hulmeville.

Now Is the Time To Give Motor Attention

PHILADELPHIA, Apr. 29.—If automobile motors were made of glass and the average motorist could see exactly what goes on inside those engines, he would soon have a clearer understanding of the importance of having his motor and the entire running gear of the car given a spring housecleaning.

Winter driving is hard on any motor. From below zero temperatures to torrid heat in a few moments after the motor has been started throws a tremendous load on the oil. Excess use of the choke, dilution—to condensation of water in the crankcase—both tend to weaken the oil, to reduce its lubricating efficiency. In addition, many oils have a tendency when diluted with the water to form power-killing deposits which clog up oil feed lines. Deposits also form around piston rings, and spark plugs become dirty thereby wasting power in gasoline. All of this speeds wear and shortens car life.

In ordinary times when new cars were obtainable, this condition was not as important as today when our present cars, trucks and busses must be made to last for the duration. The vital necessity of conserving these units can easily be understood when you realize that thousands upon thousands of American communities are wholly dependent upon motor transportation for their connections with the outside world. In addition, vast percentage of today's warworkers are transported to and from their work by busses and passenger cars.

Commenting upon the vital part the motor truck and car are playing in America's war effort a spokesman of

Sun Oil Company says: "The motor's greatest bulwark against wear is regular scientific lubrication plus the best of care and to provide these twin services, Sunoco Service Stations are offering a Sunoco Car Saver Special for Spring which completely prepares the car for warm weather."

"This service includes an exclusive Sunoco Whirlfoam Cleanout job which forces a special cleansing oil, under pressure, through all parts of the motor's lubrication system. This cleanout reaches into remote nooks and crannies and cuts loose dirty power-killing deposits which are then flushed out. Special lubricants are used on other parts of the car according to our scientific Car Maintenance Charts. At the same time, the tires, battery, radiator, headlights and other parts are completely serviced to be in the best of shape. Of course this service includes a changeover to the proper grade of Sunoco Motor Oil, the oil that is now reinforced against the wear and tear of rationed driving."

"All of these services are skillfully and scientifically rendered at one stop and one low combination price with the result that the motorist not only saves his car, but his time, money and gasoline as well."

"The vital necessity of such complete service is best demonstrated by the fact that last year alone it is estimated that approximately two million cars, trucks and busses were forced into retirement, victims of overage, overwork and general exhaustion."

Consequently, Sunoco Car Saver Service should assume an important place in the motorist's mind—and this special spring offer in particular—if he wants to be sure his car will last longer and run better. These services are provided at one stop and one low combination price at Sunoco Stations and only Sunoco dealers are able to render all of these services."

Strange Pacific Convoy Assumes Veneer of Pleasure Trip Despite Japanese Menace

tions of the country and when they saw some 17 Army nurses clambering up the gang-plank, they reacted in typical American fashion.

They broke the ice by acting as bell-hops, helping the gals carry their luggage. By the time the first mess call sounded there wasn't a single all-male table in the dining room!

That was the start of it and, from the moment we pulled out to sea, through the submarine nets strung across the mouth of the harbor, till our ship nosed into dock at this end of the journey, the boys and girls, from your backyard and mine, closed their minds and hearts to the war and concentrated on having a real, good time.

We were curious to know how some of the nurses joined the Army for they were very young. Lucille Baker, 25, El Paso, Tex.; Helen Blocker, 22, Crestline, O.; and Desta Quint, Columbus, O., agreed that most of the group joined up in response to Red Cross and similar campaign drives back home.

"We just decided to answer the call," said Miss Blocker, "and most of the others did the same thing."

Had they given any thought to the dangers involved in their jobs?

The girls admitted they had but had also agreed to face the future philosophically. "When your time comes, you go and there's no use worrying about it," is their battle slogan.

Maj. Richard Arnold, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Hartford, Conn., who was commanding officer of the ship, called a boat drill first day out. All passengers were introduced to their life-boats and life-jackets and ordered to carry the latter with them everywhere they went for the duration of the trip.

Though sleeping accommodations were crowded and water was carefully rationed these minor inconveniences were more than over-shadowed by the happy-go-lucky routine of the crowd.

Blessed with perfect sailing weather after a rough first day, the decks were jammed all day and most of the evening as closely knit groups chatted or sang softly of "moon and June and mom and jive."

On "Amateur Night" the group gathered in the ship's lounge and civilians, nurses, a couple of Army chaplains, officers and the correspondents took part in an impromptu show. A nurse who had spent some time in the islands, danced the hula; a chaplain from the hills of Tennessee ("no one would know where it was if I told you my home town," he said) told some dialect stories; there were piano solos, songs, monologues and a sports quiz on the program which ran more than three hours.

The following night the girls decided to run a dance. An ancient portable phonograph was wheeled away from the crew as were some old records, worn as thin as a hobo's shoe. Though the songs were old and barely audible because of a tortured needle, the "prom" took place as planned.

It was a touching, poignant etching we carried away that night. The sight of those kids; the girls in their old, flowered dresses, primped up as if they were going to their first formal; the nurses in their natty blue uniforms and sun-tanned young men in their khaki blouses, sliding over a bobbing square of dance floor out there, thousands of miles from home in the black and silent Pacific—tugged at your heart.

This was American youth. They had a job to do and each was on his way to do it. But Mr. Jap, his submarines and his torpedoes, was not going to frighten them or spoil what little fun they could salvage before they reached their assignments.

Major Arnold summed it up pretty well. Standing in the bow of the ship, one moonlight night, he looked at the huddled figures lining the rails all around him.

On the lower deck the crew had brought out a new phonograph and a prize collection of records they guard with their lives. For more than two hours, as the boat slipped silently through the blackness, the shirt-sleeved merchant seamen entertained the gang with the best of Tommy Dorsey, Dinah Shore, "Fats" Waller and many other favorites of the juke box fraternity.

All this, mind you, ten feet below a turret in which an ever-vigilant gun crew fondled anti-aircraft equipment and combed the skies with their eyes for enemy planes.

"Look at them," whispered the major, "just look at them. Only a few of them don't realize what this is all about. Maybe that's just as well. But most of them do and it's not going to get them down."

"You don't have to worry about these kids. They'll do all right."

He can say that again.

These are BATTLE STATIONS, too!

Before any convoy leaves this country, millions of telephone calls must be made to speed the planning, production, purchasing and shipment of the materials of war.

And to operate this vital war-time telephone service millions of items must be accounted for—people and pay checks; taxes and toll calls; supplies, receipts, and expenditures. Bills must be rendered or paid and reports made out to help steer the business.

This is our Accounting Department's part in the job of getting war calls through—its part in winning a war.

These men and women are working harder today than ever before—doing a real war job and doing it well!

Today's Quiet Moment

(By the Rev. James R. Galley)
Pastor, Bristol Presbyterian Church

O God and Father of all mankind, as we pause to realize the immensity of thy creation, as we think of the earth and its inhabitants, of the planets, the sun, the moon, the stars, of all the glory and majesty and beauty of thy creation, we wonder with the Psalmist, what is man, that Thou art mindful of him? So insignificant are we in comparison to the remainder of thy creation, yet thou hast told us that we are precious in thy sight, and thou hast demonstrated thy love for us in the sacrifice of Thy Son. Such love is beyond our ability to understand, yet we joyfully accept it, and thankfully receive its blessings. Forgive us of our periods of infidelity, and strengthen us to greater service. In the Name of Christ. Amen.
